Acknowledgement for Prometheus' ProNET on-line access account

Prometheus Laboratories Inc. ("Prometheus") is providing the person named above (the "User") the ability to access clinical laboratory testing results and related information ("Test Results") through the use of an internet web browser that is secured for HIPAA purposes. It is the User's responsibility to maintain the privacy of the protected health information once accessed from Prometheus.

All access to this information is secured by the use of a standard password mechanism. Transmission of information between the Prometheus system and the User's web browser is encrypted through the use of 128 bit secure socket layers (SSL) protocol. A user name and temporary password are provided herein to allow initial access to this system. Upon logging in for the first time, the User will be required to provide a password of his/her own choosing. This password must consist of at least six (6) characters, and no more than twenty (20) characters. It is the responsibility of the User to maintain the security of this password, and thereby the security of the accessible information.

It is the intent of Prometheus to only provide Test Result access to Users that have been identified as the ordering physician, individuals designated as a recipient of a Test Result by the ordering physician, or designee of the referring laboratory. If the User determines that any Test Result is accessible for which the User is not the ordering physician or designated individual, it is the responsibility of the User to notify Prometheus so that any errors may be corrected.

If Prometheus has reason to believe that the security of the User's access has been compromised, Prometheus will change the User's password and attempt to notify the User immediately by means of the information provided above.

I accept the terms and conditions set forth above:
